

netBender was started by two experienced IT consultants with backgrounds from Andersen Consulting (now known as Accenture) and Oracle. While providing consulting services to Fortune 500 companies, we realized the need for these services to the middle market and small business owners. However, the economies of scale afforded to large organizations often made it impossible for these smaller businesses to afford these skills. With netBender, you get the same skillset that was formerly only available to the biggest of companies.

We can assist your organization to recognize results via the Internet.
